

Attorney Michael Corey Hinton Bio:

Corey Hinton is a citizen of the Passamaquoddy Tribe (Sipayik). He has represented Native American governments and their enterprises for over a decade. As the leader of Drummond Woodsum's Tribal Nations Practice Group, Corey is a beacon of expertise in federal Indian law, the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, employment issues, and economic development. Corey has represented clients before the Indian Health Services, the Environmental Protection Agency, and various offices within the Department of the Interior, including the National Indian Gaming Commission, the Office of Indian Gaming, the Bureau of Indian Education, the Fish and Wildlife Service, and the bureau of reclamation. He also works with clients on a wide range of government-building matters, including ethics and employment policies, the negotiation and administration of Public Law 93-638 programs, and real estate matters. He regularly advises Native American governments on a multitude of internal governance issues and is strongly committed to Nation-building through resilient governmental institutions.

Bar Admissions: State of Arizona, State of Maine, Passamaquoddy Tribal, Port Gamble S'Klallam Community Court, Penobscot Nation Tribal Court, U.S. District Court of Columbia.